

... And Let Us Fall Apart

by Catalin CROITORU

” I am a fervent subway user in my city. Not because I was “convinced” by the transportation company’s ads (that are saying something like “Travel by bus or by metro and save our Planet”...), but because it is much faster than covering the same distance by my personal car. However underneath there’s another reason for me to board on a subway train: these people I am sharing the same wagon with are fascinating me! That’s because I have noticed that the travelers, once underground, are totally different from what they seemed like when I look at them up there, outside. The transformation starts when they are reaching the boarding platforms. If they were talking to each other, friends or pals, on the way down - they become silent quickly while they are waiting for the train to come;
