

© 2013 AWKTOBER. All rights reserved. Privacy Policy Terms of Service

Montreal Underground: Photo/Essay by Catalin Croitoru

There are two different worlds in Montreal, well detached, each one of each. One by its own rules. There's "the upper-world", which includes the streets and the trees, the -10C cold, rain, snow and overwhelming heat; the other world, "the underground", means all four metro/subway lines.

"There's always a strange smell that wraps the "under-world", an odor of rubber, heated plastic, oil and a "something else", not clearly defined, that makes the whole air spiky."

